I didn't believe this myself so I called the local kennel club, where a very nice woman assured me that of course she would lose her status if this were to happen and this is standard in dog-breeding circles the world over. We talked some more, and it quickly became clear that she fully understood basic animal husbandry and genetics, and she entirely took my point that there was no scientific basis for the kennel club's rules. Except, of course, that you can't contaminate the blood line.
